Vinification	Both grape varieties are vinified in a similar way. The grapes are chilled overnight in a refrigerated room to lower the temperature to 6-8°C, thereby protecting the aromatic characteristics of the grapes. The following day, the grapes are gently destemmed and very softly pressed. The must remains in a tank for one night at a temperature of around 10°C, allowing the natural sedimentation of all the solid particles to occur. The wine is moved into a stainless steel tank, where fermentation takes place at 17-19°C for 10-12 days.Following fermentation, the two wines are blended together and the wine is kept on its fine lees for around 4 months, with frequent stirring.
